

Online business services keep improving

By Daniel Kehrer

Question: We're growing. That's the good news. The bad news is that we're growing, which means our original methods of bookkeeping, invoicing, tracking inventory, customer service or you name it no longer work very well. I like the idea of managing things online. Can that work?

CashView is another new Web-based service just launched; using the same SaaS model as NetBooks. Unlike NetBooks, however, CashView targets just a few key everyday financial tasks: sending invoices, receiving payments and paying bills.

To build business, Palo Alto-based CashView offers the service free until year end. After that it's $10 per month per user, and $1 per transaction. If your business is still stuck in the paper invoicing era, this might be a good way to dip a toe into e-invoicing and collections, along with online bill payment.

CashView (www.cashview.com) could be a big time-saver for business owners who've become bogged down in the routine chores of sending invoices, collecting payments and paying bills. This site can automate the process and save you time.
